Small Is Beautiful Again: 100 High Performance Small Cap Stocks

EDITORS' PICK | Dec 4, 2020

Forbes analyzed more than 850 companies with market capitalizations ranging from $300 million to $2 billion to produce our ranking of America's 100 Best Small Cap Companies. Our selections are based on four factors: trailing 12 month stock returns, sales growth, earnings per share growth and return on equity.

Clearwater, Florida's MarineMax is another pandemic opportunist. Annual boat sales are expected to end 2020 on a 13-year high, according to the National Marine Manufacturers Association. Think of MarineMax as Carmax for boats. It today operates 77 dealerships primarily along the eastern seaboard that cater to a wealthier crowd: the average vessel sells for $200,000, with some running more than a million bucks. In the quarter ended September 30, MarineMax revenues shot up 29% to nearly $400 million, and $1.5 billion for the fiscal year. MarineMax's market cap has doubled since January.

"There was a lot of money that wasn't being spent on European travel, and that was money that they could spend on something else," says CEO Brett McGill. "So many new people have come into boating this summer... It's a numbers game and it's infectious. It's very rare you see people get in and out for one year."

The Forbes logo is displayed in a white serif font on a black rectangular background.

A man in a black tank top and shorts is water skiing on a lake. He is holding a tow rope and is in a crouched position, leaning forward. The water is splashing around his skis. In the background, there is a dense forest of tall trees. A small wooden dock with a roof is visible on the right side of the lake.
